Read the following text, and then answer the questions below:

Art Ellison is the administrator of the New Hampshire State Bureau of Adult Education in USA, which helps fund many programs for grown-ups who need to improve their skills. He says most people in these classes never finished high school. Some of them weren't successful students, while others dropped out of school so that they could go to work and support their families.

Not being able to read well as a grown-up can make life very difficult and cause complications at work and at home. There is also an emotional toll.

Often, adults with difficulty reading try to hide their problem from others. For example, Mr. Ellison explains, it's not uncommon for someone applying for a job to ask if he or she can take home an application. There, the applicant can ask a friend or even a daughter or son to help fill out the form. Others try to disguise their inability to read the options on a menu by pointing to a photograph of a dish instead, or by saying, "I'll have what that person's having."

Not being able to read at all is called illiteracy, and it can be dangerous. A person who can't read the instructions on a bottle of medication could end up in the hospital after taking too many pills, or after taking too few pills.

Some people graduated from high school but don't have good reading skills. That's partly because some schools have a policy of passing students onto the next grade, even if they haven't mastered all the material covered.

Hero

Time and time again, it has been shown that the bond between a person and his horse is incredibly strong. This has been proved by the countless stories about horses that have saved their owners' lives. This past weekend in Canada, once again a boy owes his life to his horse. Alan is a twelve-year-old boy who lives with his family, in the country. Alan was out with his horse, "Hero" when it started getting dark. The horse seemed alert and moved cautiously. When they reached home, Alan could hardly see anything. He was about to dismount and lead his horse to the stable, when the horse started stomping and neighing uncontrollably, making it impossible for Alan to get off. In panic, Alan made out the shape of a cougar about to attack him as the horse reared on his hind legs, protecting the boy. In the fight that followed, the horse managed to get closer to the house and shake Alan off onto the patio. Alan ran into the house for help. The family called 911 and waited for help to arrive as the horse and the cougar continued to fight outside their door. Luckily the police arrived just in time to save the horse. They were able to shoot the cougar and pull it away. The horse was seriously injured in the fight but is expected to make a full recovery. Alan's parents were grateful that Hero was able to protect their son from the cougar. Hero is sure to be pampered for the rest of his life by the whole family.
